Section: 5752 Core Academic Skills for Educators • Total Questions: 1 • Format: Verified Q&A

1. Which of the following best describes the organization of the passage?

I am still deeply convinced that politics is not an essentially disreputable business; and to the extent that it is, it is only disreputable people who make it so. Politics can tempt one to disreputable practices, and it therefore places high demands on people. But it is simply not true that a politician must lie or intrigue. That is utter nonsense, put about by people who- for whatever reasons- want to discourage others from taking an interest in public affairs.

- (A) A generalization is followed by a series of examples.
- (B) An opinion is presented and then elaborated upon.
- (C) An assertion is illustrated by a personal anecdote.
- (D) Two prevailing political theories are presented and then compared.
