1. Which of the following words could be substituted for 'treasure' without substantially altering the meaning of the statement?

In the past, most visitors to the Louvre museum in Paris went straight to its main attractions: the Venus de Milo, the Winged Victory of Samothrace and, of course, the Mona Lisa, who smiled at packed crowds through bulletproof glass. Less prominent objects required a marathon walk down dingy, unmarked corridors. Even then, weary art pilgrims might find their treasure locked behind a placard listing its hours as 'very irregular.' Too often the Louvre defeated its guests instead of inspiring them.
