1. It can be inferred from the passage that Flannery O'Connor would most likely have agreed with which of the following statements?

*The writer Flannery O'Connor possessed a highly reliable talent for assessing the aesthetic merit of her own works. She saw how her novel Wise Blood failed, and how certain of her stories- including 'Revelation,' 'Judgment Day,' and 'Parker's Back'- succeeded beautifully. Though she could not resist traveling to writers' conferences and universities where, in her words, 'clichés are swapped' about writing techniques and methods, she always felt that the process of creation was subject to no rules, and that, as an artist, she 'discovered' the truth of her stories in writing them.*

- (A) O'Connor's novel Wise Blood was an artistic success.
- (B) Artists can almost never evaluate their own creations reliably.
- (C) Successful novels and stories are not produced by following a specific set of rules.
- (D) Writers rarely reveal truths about their own lives in the stories and novels they produce.
- (E) Writing conferences offer valuable instruction concerning the craft of writing.
